Charles Ellis was placed in the dock, and asked if he had anything to say why sentence should not be passed upon him. He replied No. sir; nothing." His Lordship Mr. Justice Crease, addressing the prisoner, said he was found guilty of common assault; he appeared to be a persea of strong violent temper, and introduced a knife into the assault, which the Court had set its face against. Perhaps, said his Honor, but for using the knife, the sentence would not have been more than three months. The sentence of the Court is nine months' impris-

Mattheson, who seemed not to be so deeply concerned in the crime, was given one year; Cockle was given two years' imprisonment. There is no necessity in this country, said his Monor, for the crime of stealing; this is the the commission country for the poor man. The prisoners

John Wadham was brought forward, and as there was a strong recommendation to mercy from the jury, the Court said due attention would be paid to it. The prisoner in the usual form of extradition and order that the prisoner Joe be held by the authoritook sotice of the temptation placed before Wadham, and would name the lowest sen-

Fortunate for him he had a very merciful jury, and its respect, even if the Court had not been in accord with it. The prisoner, said his Henor, is a man who appeared to be of an ungovernable temper. Fortunate it was the jury discredited a certain portion of the evidence, or a mercy passed over it. He trusted this would be a warning to him for the rest of his lite; he was placed in a part of the country, which under certain circumstances, allowance should be made for him. On account of the recommendation of the jury, his Honor would pass a much smaller sentence than otherwise. He thought of imposing a fine, and the sentence of the Court was that Me-Grath pay a fine of $300, and stand committed to jail without bail until that fine be paid. The Court again impressed upon the prisoner to try and govern his temper, in dealing with the Indians in that part of the

The hon. Attorney General said that the prisoner would be in for life if he could not ayothe fine. There was no power of parden here, and if McGrath had not the money, what position, he asked, would be be place

The Bench said the sentence could at any time be mitigated by the Court.

The Attorney General differed with this

The Bench stated that the recommendations of the Court were always attended to. His Honor directed attention to the statute bearing upon the point. Mr. Justice Gray said the Parliament provided three modes of punishment, transportation, imprisonment and fine, and the decision arrived at by the Court is in accord with the recommendation of the jury. If the prisoner were in jail for more than a certain period, then application might be made for

The Attorney General said he looked first to the question of justice being done, then to the expense incurred. He would ask that a portion of the fine be remitted. My position, said he, does not call upon me to persecute

Mr. Justice Crease said that was a differest matter, and was in accord with the feelings of the Court.

Mr. Justice Gray said the Court had to look not to the ability of the prisoner to pay the fine. If the man were confined for an undue period of time, being unable to pay the fine, then application could be made to the proper authorities. The question now is, whether the punishment is in proportion to the of-

The Attorney General again replied, and dvocated a remission of the fine to $100; it à large sum .o a poor man ; it was once so

The Bench refused to alter the sentence. The prisoner was allowed to speak. He said he had applied on several occasions for protection, but no heed had been paid to him; and in this case he was unfortunate in not being able to procure witnesses; he had not

The Court said that this was a matter for tepresentation to the Governor General, and the Court would give as full force to any re-

His honor remarked that he would postpone his judgment upon the case, until the charge against Charley had been heard, although he had in reality no doubt that the prisoner Joe would have been committed to trial some days since had the offence been committed in this country.

In the case against the prisoner Charley, Mr. Courtney said that although he had taken every pains to obtain evidence against him, he did not, as the evidence stood now. feel justified in asking for a further remand of the prisoner, or detaining the attention of the Court turther.

Mr McCreight, who appeared for the prisner, said that after the admission made by the counsel for the prosecution, he could-scarcely be called upon to make any remarks for the defence. He would not argue the matter of extradition, unless it became absolutely necessary.

Mr. Johnson thought that certainly there was admissible evidence against the prisoner, and that if he should be discharged now, he might not be forthcoming when wanted upon some future occasion. He had evidently made untruthful statements, and such being the case, he would pply to his Honor for a remand of one week. Mr. McCreight argued at length that the Extradition Act, 1870, did not apply at all to this Province of the Dominion, and upon that supposition, the case would be thrown back upon 6 and 7 Vic., cap. 69, which requires that, as a preliminary to any jurisdic-tion by the Pelice Court, a requisition for a risoner must be made by the President of the United States to the Governor General of Canada. The case against the prisoner Charley was however then gone in o. Police Constable Bloemfield, sworn—From go out On the application of Mr. Johnson, the risoner was here remanded one week. Kill, charged with the murder of Fuller, was also remanded the same space of time, and the Court then rose.
